A few weeks ago I attended one of the most well informed classes I have ever attended for a personal hobby. I was not induced to go by insurance and under no formal guidance from anyone; I just found his add perusing around the internet.

Every single person who has a boat, regardless of a high performance boat, should be compelled if not forced to attend the class. Tres packs in 25 years of experience, knowledge, and research and development he has done himself from the minute you walk through the door. The only disparaging part of the class is that it was too short for me. He not only taught us the mechanics and correct way to approach and operate your boat, more importantly he explained why. And for anyone who is a logical person, you will go away thinking about every technique he told you, and the reason behind performing it.

I can't say enough about Tres' class, except that I hope that everyone who takes it will spread the good word because he cannot advertise enough to make the water as safe a place as I know his knowledge and techniques can.

Thanks
